Liberty. What man is there so bold that he should say, "Thus and thus only would I have the sea?" For whether lying calm and beautiful, Clasping the earth in love, and throwing back The smile of heaven from waves of amethyst: Or whether, freshened by the busy winds, It bears the trade and navies of the world To ends of use or stern captivity; Or whether, lashed by tempests, it gives way To elemental fury, howls and roars At all its rocky barriers, in wild lust Of ruin drinks the blood of living things, And strews its wrecks o'er leagues of desolate

Always it is the sea, and all bow down Before its vast and varied majesty.

And so in vain will timorous men essay To set the metes and bounds of Liberty. For Freedom is its own eternal law. It makes its own conditions, and a storm Or calm alike fulfills the unerring Will. Let us not, then, despise it when it lies Still as a sleeping lion, while a swarm Of gnat-like evils hover round its head r doubt it when in mad, disjointed times t shakes the torch of terror, and its cry Shrills o'er the quaking earth, and in the flame Of rlot and war we see its awful form Rise by the scaffold, where the crimson ax Rings down its grooves the knell of shuddering

And though thou slay us, we will trust in thee!

From "The Jay-Hawkers." Of the playfulness of lambs it befits no mere mortal now to speak in common prose, since the poets have long since sung heir praises in verse. For this reason, primarily, I do not mention them, but also because there were no lambs on Nancy's farm, sheep being an uncommon animal to the prairie farmer. But chickens abounded, and in these she rejoiced with a truly feminine delight. Hens, being of a shy and secluded nature, unresponsive to advances, and also not much in evidence in places where poets roam about in quest of rhymes and suitable subjects for verse, have not been selected for the same amount of eulogy and favor as has fallen to the share of the lucky lamb. Chickens, however, are not to be despised. The new-born chicken is almost the only creature that comes into the world a beautiful object instead of a repulsive fright. The much-lauded lamb is ungainly, thin-bodied and outrageously big-kneed; puppies are blind, hairy slugs; kittens are mere sightless rats, without the power of locomotion; birds of the air are wide-mouthed, skinny creatures, shamelessly devoid of clothing, so that their internal organisms can be plainly traced through their transparent skins, even without the aid of Roentgen rays; foals are set upon stilts, and can't get their heads to the ground; but the chick comes into the world open-eyed, alert, firm on its tiny legs, able to feed itself, and, above all, decently clad in fascinating down. Chickens and baby pigs carry the reason for being in the approach of Christmas time. Not many years ago it was the general custom of the publishers to get ready for this season of the year some particular Christmas stery or single poems, which they would have elaborately illustrated and gaudily bound. If these were not all sold by Dec. 24 they were practically dead-they might as well be given away when the shops opened again after Christ-mas day. This practice has about ceased. The books that the publishers issue especially for the holiday trade nowadays are usually illustrated editions of new or standard books that are always in demand and that may be expected to sell nearly as well at other times of the year. But people of good taste and culture, according to the testimony of many publishers, are getting more and more to give for Christmas ents fine editions of good books that have no special characteristics to mark them as holiday books. Publishers will point out Mr. and Mrs. David Cain have returned to their home in Miami, after visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Cain.

Mr. Clarence Kiefer, of Martinsville, was for the purpose.
